

Case Study

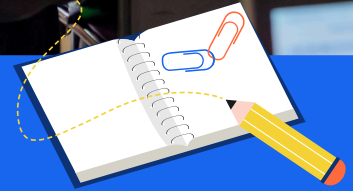

WYCKOFF SCHOOL DISTRICT (NJ)

Tutored by Teachers solved one school's teacher vacancy problem. Students kept pace with their peers who had in-person teachers.

Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School Principal, Brian Faehndrich could not find qualified teachers to step in for a math teacher on parental leave. Paraprofessionals were unable to provide the level of instructional support students needed.

The school wanted individualized instruction that could engage students and keep them on track academically. They chose live, virtual instruction with Tutored by Teachers' community of highly qualified teachers.

"Something we learned from COVID-19 is that one virtual teacher providing instruction to 24 kids is probably going to be too much," said Principal Faehndrich. "If you have them on their own personal screen in small groups, it's more personal, more connected."

Teacher Vacancy Solution

If you have teacher vacancies, we have an interim solution so that students don't have to fall behind.

- ✓ Training for your in-room paraprofessional included
- ✓ Synchronous, scaffolded instruction in small groups of students
- ✓ Live teacher support, including technical support, every step of the way
- ✓ Tier-1 instruction with the benefits of intervention

The Solution

Tutored by Teachers was the instructor of record for 12 weeks, providing virtual Math instruction to 6th grade students. Our teachers taught the school's own curriculum so that students received the same instruction as their peers.

As a result, students who received our virtual teaching solution did not fall behind. They scored the same on assessments as their peers who had in-person teachers.

"I have personally observed the tutoring in action, and it is right on target with our students' needs," said Grace E. White, Assistant Superintendent at Wyckoff School District.
